01001962 Disability inclusion has been a silo in international development, often leading to separate programmes, systems and processes. The leave-no-one-behind principle at the core of the SDGs is at risk, and persons with disabilities are a significant constituent group that requires dedicated and targeted attention if this principle is to be realized.The disability inclusive national planning and monitoring project utilizes a strategic two-fold focus: induction workshop and situational analysis. First, a comprehensive induction workshop spans organization of activities and content, material adaptation, delivery, and follow-ups. Simultaneously, a Situational Analysis, involving stakeholders, consultations, data analysis, and report drafting, propels the initiative forward. This collaborative effort, driven by the UN Resident Coordinator's Office and UN Country Team, ensures a holistic approach, joint accountability, and inclusive engagement with diverse stakeholders for impactful disability-inclusive development.
